To start OpenGL context I need to run OpenGL function call to start GLLineCache. Problem is the code runs via Qt execption handler but I need to start it before Qt main window is created. So as workaround I moved my code to a different class and created a new object of this class to run this code. This works fine - but I don't like it. How can I move my code to class and still have proper constructor execution? I have pretty small main.cpp: int main(int argc, char *argv[]) { QApplication a(argc, argv); QGLFormat format; QGLWidget *window = new QGLWidget(e79caf774b
