I know there is an expression "to be a pain in the ass" which means a person who is very annoying to be around, but I'm not sure if it also means a difficult person to make a deal with. Something like: I don't want to make the problem worse for myself, but here are my "concrete" needs. If you cannot take a "pain in the ass" (a very difficult person), please say so. A: You've answered this in your question. I don't want to make the problem worse for myself, but here are my "concrete" needs. From "Dictionary.com" (emphasis mine): painfully difficult and burdensome to endure (said by someone who is not willing to make a certain type of problem worse for themselves) The phrase "pain in the ass" literally means "ass pain", a reference to the worst type of pain, because no fun can be had while feeling pain in the ass. A: The answer here is subjective. You could simply say Someone who is a pain can be difficult. There are many ways to say "a pain in the ass". I'm the classic example of a person who is always in the wrong place at the wrong time. -- A Garden of Words by Tom Stoppard, 1972 A: Based on the comments on this answer, another common expression is to be a pain in the neck. Federal Government does not support any legislation to amend the Constitution to allow a republic, sources say. Malacañang has denied any impeachment proceedings against House Speaker Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo following a reported court order that she testify before the Senate at the impeachment trial of Chief Justice Renato Corona. Presidential legal counsel Salvador Panelo, who handled the presidential response to the order, said that the government did not recognize the alleged order. Chief Justice Corona is facing
