As a Lightroom user for a long time now, I have to agree with your review. Happy to see some positive highlights of the upgrade, but I think we're going to get some amount of negative feedback. At this point, I don't think Apple will implement a lot, but there are a few things here I really hate. 1) Why does the Quick Develop icon reappear when I create a new catalog? It's an obvious resource hog. 2) The lack of integration with the Markup panel is a big step back and certainly a design flaw. I'm not particularly happy about seeing the incredibly ugly markers on every single LR set of images. I need them to be markers, not my labels. I don't have to see them when I comb through the top left pane. 3) I still have no idea what the right way to edit JPEGs in Lightroom is. I've been making the rounds of youtube, instagram, blogs and forums and it seems this is still an issue. I was using the Smart Presets this way and it's just not working out well. 4) Now that I have Lightroom set up for importing large batches of raw files and that Lightroom is working well, I still have to go in, open any single image, open a folder, and select the right one to import. For all of the features I do want, I still need to open an image. It's an activity, not a workflow feature. I have been using Lightroom from the day I purchased my D5500, and now exactly 1 year. I am upgrading from the D400 and D600 to TL-D5500 with SC-24-64x and 250GB SSD media. I am planning to keep my 500GB HDD and the Catalog.lrc format instead of ADE or AI format. But now that I am going to AX-D400. Should I just stick with the same format? Or move to the AE? Which one is better for training? I want to learn how to improve my photographic skills and not just to make more money.
